A WEST END TRAGEDY.

had Fate of Arthur Atualetgh-The Reality of a Paint Kiss. Arthur Ainsleigh rose wearily from the bed (twenty-five cents per night) on which he had bed (twenty-five cents per night) on which he had tossed restlessly during the long watches of the night, and scanned with eager eyes The Namonal Risumican of the previous day, which his isolidady, a kindly soul, had left in the room. When in health arthur was as handsome a man as spe could wish to look upon. Reared in the lap of inxury, and dandled carefully on the knee of the same party, he had been cast, by the disappearance of a faro-bank cashier, upon the morcles of a cold and ptiliess world when just about to miter upon a life whose horizon was unfilmmed. inter upon a life whose horizon was undimmed. szeept by the rose-truted clouds of prosperity which fleeked its uttermost rim. But Arthur was not of the kind that gives way to despair. Although Seserted by those who had fawned upon him in the days of prosperity, he had confidence in his swn pure soul and strong heart. A position as ook-keeper in a shooting-gallery on the Avenue had sufficed to keep him from actual want; but an attack of Washington malaria left him penniless, and, save for his landlady, friendless.

While reading the paper an advertisement for a oung man to act as private secretary met his eye, to an wered it, and the next day received a reply, telling him to call at a residence in the West End that evening. He was on hand at the ap-pointed time, and was shown by a liveried servant into a sumptuously furnished parlor, where sat a fine-looking man of fifty, who turned his head as Arthur entered.

"Mr. Ainsleigh, I presume?" he said.
"Yes, sir; have I the honor of addressing Mr.

yvesant McGuire?" That is my name; sit down. But why do you wear a business suit when calling upon a gentleman in the evening?"

member of Congress and politician, and was to be a member of the household. The next day he en-lered upon his duties, not having seen the other members of the family, a wife and daughter. He met them at supper. Alberta McGuire was just twenty, and full of the budding beauty of young womanhood. Her hair was a deep, rich brown, which, in the sunlight, had a tinge of gold in its high lights, while in its shadows it was almost black. Her eyes were deeply brown, and so tender, so soft, that no man ever falled to admit their power. Her nose was small and straight—too small almost to be easily blown, and she was a perfect picture of proud, patrician beauty.

Arthur and Alberta soon became friendly, but of source it was only the friendship of a superior for as servant, for Artie was only her father's secretary, and franked documents for him. One overhing the entire family was in the parlor when Bertie Cecil. a society young man, and clerk in the State Department, who sought in marriage Alberta's hand, catled. After some desultory conversation Alberta saked Bertie to play, and going to the plane he rendered Beethoven's ninth symphony—that beautiful remedy for driving cats out of the neighborhood—in a thoroughly artistic manner. Alberta was in raptures, but Mr. McGuire did not seem pleused. Turning to Arthur he said: "Can you not play?"

Now was out here's chance. Going to the plane be struck a few chords softly, choosing that inexpressibly tender and melancholy key—D flat minor. Then he ran through a few modulations, and gilded into "The Skida Are Outto-day." As he sat there the memory of the days wh n he had sat before the old familiar instrument in his father's house came over him—the days when he might have have met this woman as an equal, and have told her of the love which was growing in his heart—and he played with a depth of feeling that astonished even himself. When he had finished Alberta had been as the played with a depth of feeling that astonished even himself. When he had finished Alberta simply said "Thank you," but the tone of her voice was as tender as a boarding-house steak, new comic opera "The Musketeers." and there was a suspicious moisture in her eyes. As the music ceased, Arthur saw that Alberta's eyes were full oftens. Almost without knowing what he did, he leaned forward and kiesed her banged forchead. She looked up at him guickly, with a startled flance; then up at him quickly, with a startled glance; then the best down again, and her whole form shook Forgive me," he said, "I am mad; I will go."

He turned to leave her, but she laid her hand upon his arm.
" Don't go," she said, in a very low voice.

"You bid me stay? Alberts, you know that I love you, and you are not offended?" "Offended!" she said, looking up at him, with her great eyes full of tears. "Oh, Arthur, I should

M. Rene Thury, of Geneva, has made observations on the induced currents produced by lightning flashes at a distance from the place of observation. He stretched a metal wire between the roofs of two houses, one end of which was put to earth and the other connected with a tele-phone. Each time that a flash was observed at a distance, sometimes estimated to be as much as forty kilometres, a characteristic sound was heard in the telephone at the exact instant of perceiving the light of the flash.

NEW YORK STOCK MARKET.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11,220 p. m.—The market opened very strong, but after the first hour became dull and weak, remaining so throughout the day, cosing, except in a few speculations, at a decline from the opening of from 15 to 1 per cent. The duliness and weakness of the day is attributed to large sales made by leading operators in the strong market of the past few days, during which time the public have been freely supplied with stocks. The decline, however, has not assumed sufficient proportions to confirm this belief, as it is evident that an attempt at a purchase of considerable amounts of stock would have chase of considerable amounts of stock would have the effect of advancing prices. Pacific Mail and In-dianapolis, Bloomington and Western stocks were especially active and strong in the last hoar, the former without any rumor of importance and the latter especially active and strong in the last hour, the former without any rumor of importance and the inter on the supposed good results to be had from the completion of its connecting line with the Cincinnati, sandusky and Cleveland Railroad early in January. Acting Postmaster-General Hatton has dian Commissioner deprives you of the right to send and receive through the mail free all public documents, printed by order of Congress, until the first Monday of December following the expiration of your term of office as a member of Congress. The right was conferred by the first section of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Statutes, page 356), and there are no words of restriction, limitation, or excep-tion, and therefore, as the right is statutory, it is absolute. The reason of the rule will clearly confirm this view. Its purpose was to enable mem-bers of Congress to receive for themselves and dis-tribute to their constituents the public documents ordered during their term of office, and which they were, by law, cuttiled to receive for the pur-pose of use and distribution. A limitation which would defeat the purpose in view in the canciment of the law cannot be incorporated woon.
